Dylan Dog is an eccentric private imdvestigator who takes on supernatural cases that the police can't or won't take. With his assistant Felix he hunts zombies and serial killers that raid the streets of London. Dylan is certainly not a typical character in the genre, especially when compared to the comic book heroes from the USA.

Debuting in 1986, Dylan Dog was the creation of novelist Tiziano Sclavi and illustrator Claudio Villa; an attempt by Sergio Bonelli Editore to cash in on what he believed was an audience hungry for a horror title. What emerged from that admittedly cynical origin probably wasn't what they had in mind, nor was it what Sclavi originally pitched.

In New Orleans, Dylan Dog, an ace detective whose speciality is paranormal cases, narrates how he helped people with their cases until his wife, Cassandra, was killed by vampires. Since then he has been doing regular cases with his "partner", Marcus Deckler.

My favorite Dylan Dog story was about a woman whose abusive husband had committed suicide and his ghost started leaving gifts around her house, like severed heads in the fridge. Dylan had to investigate the case and deal with her trauma. Sounds an awful lot like my dating life now.

Dylan Dog is a supernatural catalyst, so not only is he always in the middle of weird events, but often he unwillingly and without realizing it triggers supernatural events. Often Hell's "directors" take advantage of that and "use" him for their purpose.

Just as Adrian Mole defined me aged 13½, Dylan Thomas’ ‘Portrait of the Artist as a Young Dog’ did so at 18. After receiving this as a gift from my parents at age 13, I’m glad I waited to read this when I was a little older. In 10 short stories, Thomas takes you through his childhood starting as a youngster and finishing as a young man.
