But in "Imperial Bedrooms," it's like a zombie -- reanimated, but unsteady on its feet, a lot meaner, but mostly a lot dumber and a lot more desperate. Many times I had to turn to a prior page to remind myself what was happening, or to whom. That's a bore, far more than a plodding plot. I didn't like Clay in "Less than Zero."

When Clay comes home for Christmas vacation from his Eastern college, he re-enters a landscape of limitless privilege and absolute moral entropy, where everyone drives Porches, dines at Spago, and snorts mountains of cocaine. He tries to renew feelings for his girlfriend, Blair, and for his best friend from high school, Julian, who is careering into hustling and heroin. Clay's holiday turns into a dizzying spiral of desperation that takes him through the relentless parties in glitzy mansions, seedy bars, and underground rock clubs and also into the seamy world of L.A. after dark.
